Abstract: At the Anti-South African Indian Council (SAIC) Conference, held in January 1983, the call was made for a united front to be launched to co-ordinate the anti-Black Local Authorities and anti-Tricameral Parliament campaigns. A committee was established at this conference to look into the feasibility of forming a united front. On August the 20, the national United Democratic Front (UDF) was launched at a rally at the Rockland Civic Centre in Cape Town. The aim of the UDF was to co-ordinate opposition to the Apartheid State's reforms, and it served a critical role in the promotion of infrastructural networks between various organisations, regions and parties deeply affected by the State.

Introduction

At the Anti-SAIC conference held in January 1983, the call was made for a united front to be launched to co-ordinate the anti-Black Local Authorities and anti-tricameral parliament campaigns. A committee was established at this conference to look into the 'feasibility of forming a united front'. On 20 August, the national United Democratic Front (UDF) was launched at a rally at the Rockland Civic Centre in Cape Town. This launch was almost averted when fake pamphlets announcing that the rally was cancelled were distributed.

The UDF Head Office was located in Khotso House, which was owned by the South African Council of Churches (SACC). The UDF Offices were raided frequently, and Khotso House was bombed and destroyed in 1988. This resulted in valuable UDF documentation being lost. Ironically though, the confiscated material survived and was used by the State as "evidence" in the trials involving the UDF - and especially the Pietermaritzburg and Delmas Treason Trials. This UDF collection has been created by adding together documentation from different sources. Some of the material was donated by individuals who were active in the UDF or its structures or affiliates in one capacity or another. Some material comes from Valli Moosa and Murphy Morobe, others from the UDF Information Office, especially the press statements and policy documents. Most of the documents from 1989-1991 are from the UDF offices all over the country. Also added to the collection was a group of UDF documents (AD1789) that were deposited at Historical Papers for safekeeping. Given the various sources that go into this collection, there are still some important gaps that can be identified. The Northern Transvaal documents have never been located - it is doubtful if they at all exist. The material from Natal is scarce.

However, these gaps and the lack of documentation highlight important stories of the period: the severe repression, the uncertainty, the escalation of violence and resistance. At the height of the State of Emergency the organisational survival took on drastic measures to combat repression. No "open" UDF office existed. Popo Molefe and Terror Lekota with others were on trial in the "Delmas treason trial". Valli Moosa, Murphy Morobe and other UDF officials operated clandestinely, and were constantly 'on the run' to avoid detention. This impacted on the process of both record creating and record keeping. A study of this period cannot therefore solely rely on the written document.

In the late 1980s the UDF was also responsible for setting into motion the creation of national organisations for women and the civic sector. The National Reception Committee, created to deal with the release of Rivonia leaders, also operated from the UDF Offices.
