

SOUTH AFRICAN INSTITUTE OF RACE RELATIONS (INC.)
SUID-AFRIKAANSE INSTUTUUT VIR RASSEVERHOUDINGS (INGELYF)
SOUTHERN TRANSVALL REGION

SOUTH AFRICAN INSTITUTE OF RACE RELATIONS (INC.)
SUID-AFRIKAANSE INSTITUUT VIR RASSEVERHOUDINGS (INGELYF.)
SOUTHERN TRANSVAAL REGION.

DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTIONS IN AFRICA.

by JULIUS LEWIN.

Summary of lecture on May 4th.

African leaders want to put an end to the "misery-go-round" in their countries now that they have achieved independence. They want to break the old circle of poverty, lack of skill, and ill-health in which their people found themselves caught.

Accordingly, the question African political leaders have to face is not whether they can work a parliamentary system on the Westminster model, but what type of political system will bring rapid economic progress.

Africans wanted to raise their standard of living more than they wanted democratic institutions.

Hence their readiness to follow a leader with a magnetic personality who undertook to modernise the economy of his country.

The degree of democracy which a country can afford to maintain depends on the rate of economic and social progress which it sets itself.

If the new states have to choose between democracy and economic growth without democracy, they will, I predict, be inclined to choose the latter.

In any event, African governments have to take the initiative far more than western governments in providing what is required.

They cannot rely on private enterprise, which is usually non-existent owing to the absence of a strong middle class. Development means social change and in order to ensure that economic development occurs, public enterprise must pave the way for social change; for instance, through speeding up educational processes.

It must, however, be realized that democracy exists in a variety of forms and to different degrees all over the world.

Very few countries have really practised democracy with success on the Westminster model or even on the lines of Washington.

The 20 Latin American republics, for instance, were neither full democracies nor complete dictatorships, but something in between these two poles.

Britain had been fortunate in the conditions under which parliamentary institutions emerged and began to work in the 19th Century.

Economic growth and the accumulation of capital for further investment took place long before the franchise was extended to ordinary working people.

First the development of commerce and later the industrial revolution allowed the rise of a strong middle class. This class first won political rights for itself, reflecting its economic power, and then, in order to preserve the existing political system, enlarged it to include other classes.

The parliamentary system, including the legal rights of a loyal Opposition, worked well in Britain because the people shared a common culture, a common language and a common religion. They could safely afford to bicker because they were agreed on the fundamentals of their common society.
 /language

This high degree of unity was lacking in the new African states. That is why the prospects of political democracy were not bright there.

This does not necessarily mean dictatorship. A presidential system allowing some scope for democratic institutions may well be preferred.

Africa needed sympathy, understanding and constructive help.

Collection Number: AD1715

SOUTH AFRICAN INSTITUTE OF RACE RELATIONS (SAIRR), 1892-1974

PUBLISHER:

Collection Funder:- Atlantic Philanthropies Foundation

Publisher:- Historical Papers Research Archive

Location:- Johannesburg

©2013

LEGAL NOTICES:

Copyright Notice: All materials on the Historical Papers website are protected by South African copyright law and may not be reproduced, distributed, transmitted, displayed, or otherwise published in any format, without the prior written permission of the copyright owner.

Disclaimer and Terms of Use: Provided that you maintain all copyright and other notices contained therein, you may download material (one machine readable copy and one print copy per page) for your personal and/or educational non-commercial use only.

People using these records relating to the archives of Historical Papers, The Library, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, are reminded that such records sometimes contain material which is uncorroborated, inaccurate, distorted or untrue. While these digital records are true facsimiles of paper documents and the information contained herein is obtained from sources believed to be accurate and reliable, Historical Papers, University of the Witwatersrand has not independently verified their content. Consequently, the University is not responsible for any errors or omissions and excludes any and all liability for any errors in or omissions from the information on the website or any related information on third party websites accessible from this website.

This document forms part of the archive of the South African Institute of Race Relations (SAIRR), held at the Historical Papers Research Archive at The University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa.