A SOCIO-ECONOMIC CLASSIFICATION
OF OCCUPATIONS IN CAPE TOWN

---

NOVEMBER 1946

REPORT NO. SS 8

---

Throughout large groups of persons or households, occupation is to a certain extent an index of social status. For use in the Social Survey of Cape Town, a socio-economic classification of occupations was devised according to principles described as follows:-

The Survey classification of households is not based directly upon earnings, or incomes, but upon social status. Such a classification is not hard-and-fast for individual cases. A very large income, from whatever source, is often a passport to any social group, and to a lesser extent the converse also perhaps holds true. But it is a fact that there is a well-defined tendency for persons and households to form into social groups along occupational lines.

Such classifications are commonly used in Social Surveys, and most of the schemes adopted owe much to the British Registrar-General's scheme of 1911. The Cape Town classification is based in broad principle upon the British Registrar-General's scheme, but has also borrowed from the useful modifications adopted in the Merseyside Survey. Even the Merseyside scheme, however, could not be applied as it stood to Cape Town, and it was found necessary to start afresh with the actual circumstances of Cape Town, and so to build up a list which, while agreeing in principle with the two mentioned, differed considerably from them in detail.

The Cape Town list was constructed in the following manner. All the occupations returned by the two thousand households of the Household Survey [see Report SS 5], and all the occupations returned by the four thousand voters carded for Reports SS 6 and SS 15, were sorted into grades according to the criterion of degree of social intercourse [see Report SS 6, Appendix A]. Many doubtful cases arose. These were submitted to the judgement of several expert and lay critics until some rule became clear by which they could be finally allocated. In this way a list was derived, which forms the subject of the present Report.

It should be pointed out that the list is not an exhaustive list of occupations, but only a list of those occupations referred to in the preceding paragraph. Its purpose was not to establish a new theoretical standard but to classify the occupations encountered in the Survey according to principles in harmony, as far as might be, with the British Registrar-General's system.

It is recognized that to attempt a comparison of this kind is to invite criticism on general grounds; for the class system of the Union of South Africa has several curious, and almost unique, features that complicate very seriously all attempts at comparison with European countries. It was nevertheless thought better to try to deal with these complications, and to submit the result for criticism, than to evade them.

Attention should perhaps be drawn to the statement on the preceding page that the classification is not hard-and-fast for individual cases. In general, we should expect the members of Class A to have more in common socially with other members of the Class than with the the members of Class B; but that by no means rules out the possibility that the most successful or otherwise outstanding members of Class B may have more in common with some members of Class A than with the majority of members of Class B, or that the least successful members of Class B may have most in common with Class C. Particularly the business occupations are difficult to group under simple headings -- a business manager, for instance, or an importer, or a wholesale merchant, to take three examples from many, can hardly be classified socially on the strength solely of the names of their occupations. The object in compiling the list has therefore been to classify each occupation under that heading which would be best applicable to the largest group of those persons following the occupation. If this has been achieved, while the list will not serve to classify individuals it should enable us satisfactorily to classify groups.

The general scheme of the classification is as follows:-

- A: Administrative and independent professional
- B: Subordinate professional and independent commercial
- C: Subordinate commercial
- D: Skilled manual
- (E: Predominantly manual, but involving special responsibility)
- F: Semi-skilled manual
- G: "Unskilled" manual
- H: Occupations not actively directed towards getting an income
- J: Seeking employment.

It may be added that the classification makes no special allowance for war conditions. During the past few years, members of all the occupation groups from A to J might, for instance, have found temporary occasion to return their occupation as Soldier. It is not competent for a classification like the present to attempt to do justice to these and other special circumstances of a war-time economy.
