FIGHTING WITH NATIVES.

It will be remembered what a howl of indignation went forth when the Boers, having tried to seduce the Baralongs from their allegiance and signally failed, found that the natives were armed and ready to resist when Olive Schreiner's "Simple hearted Boers" wanted to rob and murder them. How virtuously they pointed out the wickedness of allowing black men to fight against white, and how strongly they remonstrated with B.P. upon the same matter. Whether since then they have changed their ideas with regard to the question, or whether they are now in such desperate straits that they seize any help that offers, or whether not having bravery enough in themselves, they wished to gather a little from the more courageous Native, is undecided, but this is certain that yest_rday on our southern front. Natives and Boers advanced together, in skirmishing order, but protected by bush, till within 800 yards of our trenches. The Boers, when alone, do not come nearer than 3,000 yards, except when sheltered by earthworks, but accompanied and encouraged by Natives they approach within comfortable reach of our marksmen. Of course they "sprinted" as usual, directly our boys opened fire upon them, but the fact that they did advance so near shews that the kaffirs are infusing some little courage into the breasts of these unwarlike heroes.

VRYBURG

The Native who came from the above named dorp, the other day, says the Boers there are no longer armed, the town is not fortified, everything is quiet under a Landdrost, but the commando, principally Maritzani men, have gone South to meet our troops. Snyman and other sub-commanders are grumbling at having been persuaded to overrun British territory, break up the line, and commit other depredations without their leaders having ascertained more about our strength. They say they have, by their action, made us wild and now we are "wiping them out." Representatives have been sent to the Langberg to get the Natives to rise and assist the Boers, but they don't hanker after such a job. At a meeting called at the Court House they declined the tempting suggestion that they should join the Boers in attacking the British. The Boers must be "clutching at a straw" when they expect assistance from these Natives. Their own men, the rebels of the Vryburg district, could never be cajoled to go fifty miles from their farms. Certainly they will never be made to face a body of trained men, either with or without the assistance of the diseased Langberg tribes. Friendly Vryburgians were surprised, even to tears, at learning that Mafeking still exists. Down to the middle of last month they were under the belief that there was no more Mafeking. They were told that after two day's shelling the whole place was destroyed. If the Boers think we are all killed they had better try a walk in here and convince themselves to the contrary.
