Xmas Day 1948

Dear Jehanna,

Yesterday I was at Inanda. It was only then that I discovered that you had removed everything that must have belonged to you. Even pillow slips on the bed. Even sheets on the spare rooms.

The whole thing is a wonder and mystery to me. Please explain to me the cause of all this attitude you have adopted against me.

You know of my policy that I never show any signs of disappointments nor feelings of regret when injured. In this your case I cannot help, but I ask you to give me an explanation. If I read your letters you were coming home for good. Up to your last letter you were wondering if that and that was kept up to date. Had it not been for the driver who told me that you told him from the train that you were on a few days visit, I could be feeling that there is something that you were told about me bad enough which compelled you to pack up and leave home like that.

In writing this letter I am wondering if at all you are at Weenen. In any case where ever you are Nurse Manqele will forward to you this letter. I am writing (writing) this letter on this Xmas Day. Through your action all my plans have been disorganised. Will you please favour me with a reply.

yours sincerely
