Dear Pogrand,

Many thanks for your letter; ^{which arrived today} it was good to hear from you, and to know that you are still, despite everything, in some small way optimistic. One follows the accounts here; of course, the coverage is not all it might be, either in quantity or quality, but a good deal does appear, one way and another. There is any amount of sympathy and goodwill here - for what good that might be to you - and Laurence, of course, having a considerable international reputation makes a good deal of difference. (Please pass on to him ~~my~~ very best wishes.)

I will do something about the books problem, both for ~~you~~ ^{the man} and the children, and keep you informed. enclosed picture.

Thank you also for the very interesting ~~material~~. I would like to show this to a few people of the kind who might be interested for their own private purposes, and I will, of course, bear in mind what you say about the problems involved. But it may be that eventually, in certain circumstances of one kind or another, you may feel that the obvious difficulties involved in letting a larger number of people see it, or know about it, no longer apply. If you ever do feel this, I would be very grateful if you would let me know; the essence of these things, especially in a country like Britain, is of course sharing it with a lot of people, which might do some good. But naturally I will do nothing without your very clear and specific agreement.

With every good wish for all eventualities: please be assured that if the worst happens you will not be forgotten, and there will be no lack of reminders, from me and many others, to people here. I realise that that is small comfort, and I wish I could offer more. But accept it for what it is, and my sympathy and admiration with it.

Yours ever
Bernard L.
