FOREWORD

THE works of art described in this catalogue are an unique contribution to an unique fund.

The Treason Trial Defence Fund was established in the interests of 156 persons arrested on charges of High Treason more than a year ago. The Fund has been duly registered according to law as a Welfare Organisation. It bases its appeal to the public on two propositions: the accused are entitled to a proper defence against the grave charges they face, and their dependants, if in need, are entitled to support. In other words, the Fund has been established in the name of justice and in the name of humanity.

For 61 of those charged, the trial is over because the authorities have decided, after more than 12 months of wearisome proceedings, that they have no case to meet. Among them is Albert Lutuli, President-General of the African National Congress, who has served as an executive member of the Christian Council of South Africa, and has visited India and the United States of America on Church and Missionary work. Who can calculate the cost in money to these men and women, of the disruption of homes, the loss of employment, the damage to careers? And 95 still remain to face further proceedings. How long these will take no one can say with certainty.

One thing is certain. Much money is still needed to provide the costs of legal defence, and to contribute to the maintenance of the wives and children of the accused

When the arrests took place last year the free world was interested, and its interest in the plight of the accused has increased rather than abated. It is not surprising, therefore, that many of the world's foremost artists have now chosen to help the Treason Trial Fund. In doing so, they affirm their recognition that the Fund is an appeal made in the cause of justice and on the grounds of a broad humanity which transcends all national boundaries.

The success of the sale of these works of art will be a further proof that the people of Cape Town appreciate the importance of such an appeal.

† Joost, Cape Town.
Archbishop.
